Charity Shop DJ Invites you to be part of the new Derby Record Holders Project

Charity Shop DJ is an international music project run by the Derbyshire-based artist Andy Jupp.

Its aim is the strengthening and celebration of communities. Andy's work uses music as a means of communication and dialogue across generations, communities and sectors. The work has taken him from charity shops and old peoples homes to the Houses of Parliament and Jammu and Kashmir.

For radio, television and press coverage, please see www.charityshopdj.com

From January to May 2009, the Derby Record Holders project will see a series of music workshops with community groups and individuals across the city, where people will be invited to share their musical choices with one another.

Stills photography and film footage will be produced which will become part of an exhibition in Derby Museum in Summer 2009.

It will also form a key part of a major new World Record Holders project in the run up to 2012, involving leading Olympic athletes and sports personalities.

By communicating these creative choices with each other, it is hoped that people of different ages and backgrounds will understand something new about one another in a spirit of equality and respect. And that young people will engage with sport through the medium of music and culture.

Derby Record Holders will feature on the BBC Big Screen and on radio.

Andy is already working with schools and pensioner groups in Derby (see BBC East Midlands Today coverage on www.charityshopdj.com), and has performed at Quad and other venues in the city.
